Wyo-Ben's strength lies in its Big Horn Basin reserves, nestled in the pristine landscapes of North Central Wyoming and South Central Montana. These natural resources have fueled the company's ability to consistently deliver top-notch products. However, it's not just about what they mine; it's about how they harness these resources to create solutions that improve industries and communities worldwide.

In 2021, Wyo-Ben celebrated its 70th year anniversary with a unique gift to its customers and enthusiasts - the "Wyo-Ben Chronicles" online. This digital platform allows stakeholders to delve into the company's rich history, showcasing its evolution from a small operation to an industry leader. The Chronicles not only celebrate the past but also illuminate the path forward, where innovation continues to drive the company's growth.

The year 2020 marked another milestone in Wyo-Ben's journey as they launched Wyo-Ben Pet, a division committed to producing clumping cat litter. Located in the heart of Billings, Montana, this facility has become the hub for packaging clumping cat litter for private label and own brands. It's a testament to Wyo-Ben's ability to diversify and adapt, even in the face of challenges.

What truly sets Wyo-Ben apart is its unwavering commitment to family values. Today, the legacy of Wyo-Ben lives on through Keith Brown's sons, David Brown, President and Chief Executive Officer, and Richard Brown, Vice President – Resources. Additionally, Rockwood Brown Jr., Vice President – Legal Counsel, plays a crucial role in ensuring the company adheres to the highest standards of ethics and integrity. Their leadership carries forward the tradition of excellence and innovation established by their forebearers.

Wyo-Ben's story is not just about clay; it's about a family's dedication to building something meaningful and lasting. It's about employees who are more than just workers; they are stewards of a legacy. It's about a commitment to quality and innovation that has made Wyo-Ben a trusted name in industries across the globe.

As we look to the future, we can only anticipate that Wyo-Ben's journey will continue to be one of progress, adaptability, and success. This remarkable company exemplifies the spirit of American enterprise, and its story is an inspiration to all who believe in the power of hard work, dedication, and the enduring strength of family values.
